Lethbridge Experimental Letter

Crested Wheat as a Lawn Grass

A fresh, green looking crested wheat grass lawn at the District Experimental Sub-Station, Whitefish, when all native vegetation was still quite brown, has prompted your weekly letter writer to quote the following from Pamphlet 157 N. S., Don. Dept. of Agriculture.

"Crested wheat grass was tested for the first time as a turf grass in 1930 at the University of Sask. Its use for this purpose was suggested by the fact that a satisfactory grass for farm lawns was not available to the farmer living in the drier sections of the Prairie Provinces. Crested wheat grass seemed to offer possibilities for this purpose because of its great drought resistance, ability to control weeds, and tolerance of close clipping. Further encouragement was given to try the experiment by having a strain with fine leafy stems and practically free from the tufted habit of growth. This original lawn has been closely clipped with a lawn mower during four successive seasons. At times of writing the stand is as good as ever with no evidence of thinning. Weeds have never been able to invade the lawn and it has always presented an attractive appearance, especially in hot dry weather. It is the first patch of green to appear in the spring and the last to disappear in the fall. The lawn has never been watered, even in the driest periods."

Since the first lawn was established a considerable number of experimental lawns have been laid down. Tests have been made on the effect of seeding at different times through out the season and on cutting at

FLEMING'S FOLLY

— BY —
LAWRENCE A. KEATING

SYNOPSIS

The story begins with Link Fleming addressing a meeting of Boone County cattlemen, called together with the object of forming an irrigation district.

The meeting terminates, but Buzz Hamilton and his sister, Helen, Link and his wife, Anna, are left alone. Fleming questions about his "spread". This angers Buzz, who plans to shoot him. In defense his sister and he are beaten with his "spread". Buzz shoots at him, but, Buster Townsend, Link's former, is shot in the stomach, and Fleming is taken to the hospital. He is sentenced to three years imprisonment.

Helen and Fleming form a partnership to provide irrigation for their own property.

Having gone home and studies the plans drawn by Torney to learn what they could be adapted to a similar scheme, Helen and her father and the cattlemen are satisfied it could be done.

Feeling cold, he lights the fire, but, Bustor Townsend, Link's former, is shot in the stomach, and Fleming is taken to the hospital.

He is rescued from the blaze by an engineer.

Buzz Hamilton arrives back in town while Fleming and Helen are in the saloon getting a loan for payment of wages for work on the dam. Roger King and Jackpot Melt meet him and invite him to join with them. By the time his sister and Link come from the bank, Buzz has been beaten and his story distorted the facts concerning the dam proposal to Buzz, making it appear that Link had been beaten by him.

"You really think I'm brain-cracked, Sheriff?"

Stephen's cheeks grudgingly relaxed into what was for him a benevolent grin, though for anyone else it would have been a mean-spirited sneer. "Beckon yuh go home," he said. "I'll yuh do after you go busted and take the Triple H along. And get yourself killed? What about the gal?" he persisted.

Fleming dropped from his saddle and reined his horse to a standstill. He had a concerned ring to his voice. "Not unless I stay on this horse and ride till sunseet."

"Hmm. From what I hear you're goin' to lose everything."

The rancher looked up. "What do you mean, Anna?"

Stephen raised his lips as if to whistle, but changed his mind. "Doe for killin', too. That's bad," he said, with a concerned ring to his voice. "Not unless I stay on this horse and ride till sunseet."

There were some who believed that the act was unfair, and until it is thoroughly explained there will still be a lot of confusion in the working of the Act.
